By DAVID LAWRENCE. (Continued from First Page.) to the sea, and save without equivoca tion "I am thinking now of Austria herself." His message, significantly enough. put in greater detail than any allied statesman has heretofore the national aspirations of Austria, and says that country shall be dealt with on a basis of "justice and equality of rights."

Wantel Weaken Germany. To the American mind the request for a declaration of war on Austria at the same time that words of friendship are uttered may have seemed somewhat inconstatent and odd logic, but considering the purpose the President had in view and the information available to him through diplomatic available to sim through diplomatic channels, the message is now described as siming plainly to detach Austria from her alliance with Germany and bring about an early peace through a weakening of the resources of the central powers. And certainly if Austria made a separate peace, Bulgaria and Turkey would follow suit.

Since these who know gonditions inside the dual monarchy are arguing that the declaration of war will be regarded as a technical affair by Austria aimed mostly to enable the United States to have a voice in the council which shall secure for the dual monarchy. PHILADELPHIA dual monarchy, the gangrous principles of readjustment enunciated by Mr. Wilson, there was in many quarters an optimism approaching even enthusiasm over the possible effects of the President's diplomatic drive.

President Asserts Self. What is happening really is that the President is asserting himself in the councils of the ailles with an un mistakable seal. He has not had things all his own way with the allies, but the time has come when he is beginning to make clear that the United States as a principal beliigerent aiding in the expenditure of men and money in ungdudging measure, is more and more aggressive with respect to Russia, where by tacit admis-sions in the President's message, the sions in the President's message, the allied policy has not been altogether happy. Mr. Wilson's open affirmation of the Russian formula of "No annexations, no contributions, no punitive indemnities," even though belated, is calculated to show the Bolsheviki that America stands with them in their espousal of pure and not hypocritical democracy.

But the policy of the President is calculated to do something more than that—to prove conclusively to the present rulers of Russia that no matter how extreme or radical their kind of democracy may be, no democracy will be safe, nothing that Russia establishes will be secure, so long as adjacent to her is an intriguing and designing Germany.
